N-Throughout history there have been many historical figures who have had power and lead a group of people from as big as a country to as small as a town. However, not all of them were leaders. Some are counted as dictators. There is a big difference between the two. A dictator is someone who lacks teamwork and is anti-democratic. However, a leader has good communication skills and is reliable. For example Hitler is one of the most famous dictators. He was hungry for power and struck fear in others. At the same time, there are famous leaders such as Gandhi who fought for Indian independence without using violence.

We should use the qualities of a good leader such as Gandhi in our everyday life. We also use these qualities in SMART. SMART has organised leadership badges to help students with their leadership skills. The student will gain their badges after they've done a certain number of tasks. Remember, when completing these tasks be a leader, not a dictator.
